Living as a Catholic disciple in the modern era is challenging - societal norms and moral reflect a diversity of understandings regarding truth - and whether an objective norm for behavior even exists. Often teachers, catechists, and even parents are faced with the difficult task of expressing the truths of a life in Christ at a time when competing worldviews (pluralism, individualism, materialism, moral relativism) are widespread and socially accepted. How can we hand on the faith to the next generation of Catholic disciples, upholding the saving truth it contains, while still respecting the journey towards wholeness and holiness that we are all on?

Cathy Walz has been engaged in ministry in the Archdiocese of Chicago for over 25 years. In parishes, she has served a Catholic School teacher, a Director of Religious Education, and a High School Youth Minister. She worked for the Office for Catechesis and Youth Ministry for 8 years- the last two years as Associate Director. Cathy is currently the Pastoral Associate for Children and Family Faith Formation at Old St. Mary's Parish. She is eager to share her faith and her experiences in ministry. Cathy and her husband have four adult daughters and two granddaughters.
